Dunkirk uncovers town treasures

Posted on September 1, 2017

Former Dunkirk Clerk Bob

Douglas (left) and current councilman Dan Marshman wear some of the GAR neck gear used in national events by the local chapter during the late 1800s. The colorful items were part of a collection of local historical treasures rediscovered in the attic of the municipal building.

Items from 1880s-'90s had been stored in attic of town hall

DUNKIRK – Until recently, most people in the village of Dunkirk had no idea there were two historical treasure chests stored in the attic of their municipal building. Possibly the only person in the village who was aware the two trunks of memories existed was former town clerk Bob Douglas. He had been told of the cases tucked away in the upper level of the building by former mayor and local historian the late Jim Shuff.

“I knew they were up there, but there were few others that knew about them,” he said.

Douglas said he didn't have much information regarding what was stored inside the boxes. He had only looked in them once, he said, but he knew they were of historical value to the community. In recent years, said Douglas, he would think of what would happen to the material in the trunks should he not be around to tell others of their existence, so when Councilman Dan Marshman drove his bicycle past Douglas' home recently, Douglas stopped him to share the information.

Marshman, with the assistance of village workers, located the chests and carried them downstairs for inspection.

As a lover of history, Marshman said, what he found inside was very interesting.

Books from local organizations, old maps of larger cities, family correspondents and journals, all from the 1880s and 1890s, were waiting for discovery.

Douglas said as they searched through the material, he hoped to find information on families or friends he would remember, but the material seemed to predate him by several decades.

"I was hoping to find more names I would recognize, but these were before my time," he said.

Nestled in the boxes were documents from the local Grand Army of the Republic chapter, which was very active in the events of the national organization. In a bag next to the trunks contained some neck pieces believed to have been used during GAR national activities, such as the 1895 dedication of the Chickamuga and Chattanooga National Military Park. There also are maps of the city of Chattanooga. The group also attended national GAR events as far away as Denver.

Music played by the Dunkirk band members of the GAR are found in the chests.

Documents found indicate the GAR paid $1.66 per month for rent on their building in Dunkirk.

There are journals from the Women's Relief Corporation, which helped members of the military. The Dunkirk group attended the organization's 1887 meeting in Sandusky.

There were also letters from Col. Jason P. Rush, which were written at the turn of the 20th century to his family in Dunkirk.

Material from the local Order of the Odd Fellows group also were found.

The treasure in the trunks will be sent to the Ohio Historical Society, which will keep any items it finds to be valuable to them. Marshman doubts there would be much interest at the state level on the items since they are so specific to the history of Dunkirk.

What is left will be offered to the Hardin County Museum.

Should the museum have no interest in the items, said Marshman, he is not sure what will be done with them.

"They don't really belong to the village," he said. "They belong to the community. They are personal items. I'm not sure who would maintain them. What happens to them is a question I don't have the answer to. I wouldn't want to see them destroyed ... I was never in the military, but I have a high interest in history and I value keeping the past alive as much as we can."
